Method used to choose precincts and batch of ballots to manually tally (include description of random selection method):

Three manual tally board members were given nine-sided dice. The first rolled one die, the second rolled two dice, and the third rolled three dice resulting in a single digit, double digit and triple digit number. Each of the three numbers would represent a batch according to the order they were tabulated. One live ballot batch was tabulated in the election and that batch was also included in the manual tally.
